Five other honorary degrees have been veted, some "in absentia," to Bowdoin soldiers of distinction

In conferring the degree upon Mr. Munkey President Sills said:
"Originator of the clean, popular magazine that bears his name, owner of newspapers of national influence, writer whose style is marked by force, originality and unaffected genius, recipient of the decoration of the Legion of Honor from the French Government for services rendered the allied cause, patriotic advocate of America's business in the war, loyal son of the State of Maine."

The inscription that accompanied the degree of doctor of laws in the case of Mr. Gibson was this: "Overseer of the college during the war, general manager of the American Red Cross, American Red Cross Commissioner to France, American Red Cross Com-missioner to Europe, whose skill in organizing was in a large measure re-sponsible for the effective work of the great American army of mercy, recog-nized at home and abroad as one of se in civil life who contributed most to the victory we celebrate."
At the alumni dinner after the comement ceremonies, Mr. Mussey told way that held the close attention of the 600 graduates how he grew up a boy almost in the shadow of the liege now honoring him and how he a regretted the circumstances which t him away from Bowdoin's gates, talked of practical work in life. of the productive capacity of a nation which has to replace the vast wastage of the great war, of the need of an independent army and of the road to "I have found no short cut," he said, architects of the college. The alumnialso were informed that the faculty were to put in effect next year a system of general examinations designed to test the student's knowledge of the subject he was studying, not merely of courses taken. The general examination would occur at the end of the junior year or occur at the end of the junior year or in the middle of the senior year. Bowdoin in this aspect will be the first institution to follow the example of Harvard, where an instructive experi-ment of this kind is already in progress. For the regular course there were sixty-six bachelor degrees, sixteen of dector of medicine and thirty-one cer-tificates of honer for men who entered the service and did not return to college.

The year at Exeter has in many ways been unique in the matter of difficulties met and overcome. To begin with, the influenza in the fall term lost many days of work; at the end of the term only half of the accustomed tasks in some cases had been accomplished. In addition, the hattalion was taking much time. tion, the battalion was taking much time and attention, and the eyes of the stu-dents were turned more often to the batle scarred fields of France than on their books.
